PREFACE

The 1988 Yackety Yack has attempted a different task this year. In "Shades of Blue" we have chosen to represent something unique and special about the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill — the diversity so characteristic of the University and the town in which it resides. A town and campus filled with an array of individuals, Chapel Hill is like no other place on earth (or at least in North Carolina). No other place exhibits such life, such a variety of lifestyles and such variety! It doesn't matter what you believe in or what you look like, there is someone else in Chapel Hill who shares something with you. From green haired punk rockers to flute playing, tofu eating flower children; they can all be found here and are part of, what we refer to as, "Shades of Blue."

This year the Yack attempts to represent the individuals, students, teachers, and residents who create this unique atmosphere we call UNC-Chapel Hill. Unfortunately we cannot depict every individual or event, although this is always our ideal goal. Thus, we give you "Shades" and hope that you enjoy this capsule of the people and happenings of the 1987-1988 academic year. Afterall, that is the purpose of a yearbook.

Shades: 1. degree of darkness of a color; gradation of a color with reference to its mixture with black; as in various shades of blue
2. (a.) a small difference or variation; as, shade of opinion;
(b.) a slight amount or degree; a trace; touch; suggestion; as a shade of humor in his voice

GLIMPSES

Charlson

From the first nationally celebrated Martin Luther King, Jr. Day to the annually UNC celebrated Springfest and Burn-out, 1988 proved to be an eventful year for UNC students. It was the year of the anti-CIA protests, the California raisins and "Dirty Dancing." But we cannot forget the more "usual" things — moving in, the dreaded drop add (ugh!), classes, exams and most of all the people that we will never forget. Arranged chronologically, the student life section spans from Fall 1987 to Spring 1988 with an epilogue at the end of the book. On these two pages are glimpses — a brief introduction to student life at UNC-Chapel Hill. Here we go!

FEVER OF A DIFFERENT COLOR

By Timothy Lemke

"I'm a TarHeel born. I'm a Tarheel bred. And when I die I'll be Tarheel dead. GO TO HELL STATE "

These words spew from Kenan Stadium like an immense cheer from a granite megaphone. The stadium is as crowded as a hospital during an epidemic. The sounds evoke the chaos of beds filled with delirious patients.

Yet, like the lazarettos of old, Kenan Stadium houses only patients suffering from a unique fever. This strange fever remains indigenous to a small area simply known as the "Southern Part of Heaven;" yet, the number of those infected has grown to epidemic proportions. The illness neither discriminates on the basis of race, creed, sex, religion or age. It uniformly contaminates all who dare expose themselves to it.

This feverish plague remains unnoticed — all but anonymous to society. The anonymity may be attributed to its symptomatic similarities with the common fever: bodily temperature increases, sharp rise in heart rate, delirium and chills. A sudden charge in body temperature represents the fever's initial stage. Fans have reported that as they file into Kenan Stadium, often, they will begin to experience heat flashes and a marked increase in body perspiration. Closer observations have revealed that sufferers also undergo a subtle facial discoloration or flushed look.

"When you enter the stadium you can feel the excitement," William Bryant said, "you can feel the blood rising toward your head, and adrenaline makes your body feel like it's on fire."

The victims exhibit a strange urge to gather each fall weekend in Kenan Stadium. This produces one of the pyrexia's most bizarre spectacles. "this whole raft of people a'setting on these two banks," Andy Griffith said, "and a'looking at one another across this pretty little green cow pasture."

As the Carolina fans mass together their concentrated ardor erupts into a mob of nervous excitement. Nervous agitation will impress the illness causing the victim to lapse into condition two: a sharp increase in heart rate. The heart's rapid pumping often causes sufferers to describe feelings of warmth, exhilaration and delirium. "The game's excitement causes you to start clapping faster and faster," Angela Fowler said, "until you're so thrilled that your heart seems like it's going to burst."

A quickened heart rate intensifies the individual's fiery condition, thus weakening the patient for the fever's fiercest assault. This may appear to others as an uncontrollable fit of insanity or delirium. The delirium may cause its victims to either scream wildly, bounce up and down aimlessly, wave shredded strands of paper tied to a stick, slap people located about them, or shout blood-curdling obscenities. However, many victims perform all of these febrile actions. "My mind just starts to swirl when the team comes onto the field," Debbie Proctor said, "I feel insane...but it's a fun kind of craziness you hope doesn't end."

"There are some maladies," an anonymous author wrote, "we must not seek to cure."

Like most pyrexias, this rare southern affliction will begin to abate after several hours. The fever's decline produces a feeling of ague in its sufferers. These fits of shivering, chills, and cold sweat embody the illnesses only drawback — an end to the excitement. The fever's excitement is a fiery burst of hope, joy and a rekindling of each victim's youthful flames. However, only those lucky few whose hearts bleed Carolina blue can boast of having experienced this miraculous fervor

 This heated passion can be described by a simple term familiar only to its many victims —
 CAROLINA FEVER. Yet, Carolina
 Fever is open for all to experience and enjoy. All one has to do to catch it is repeat.

Halloween on Franklin Street

By Lynn Wooten

The red M&M let out a shriek. Her fellow M&Ms turn to find out what was wrong. Before them stood a sight that made their eyes pop out in shock: The Flasher.

On Franklin Street?

Yes, it's that time again. Like clockwork, Franklin Street comes to life in its own unique way for Halloween.

True, Franklin Street has come alive other times, notably when Carolina won the NCAA Championship in 1982, or the night the drinking age went up to 21 in 1987. But Halloween on Franklin Street is something different.

The block resembles an oblong track that people circle — to see and be seen. Starting at Spanky's, they move slowly down to Four Corners, where they pile up as they wait for the crossing light to flash WALK. On the other side, they pass Hill they cross back to Spanky's and start the lap again.

It is what they see that keeps them circling and circling for hours.

First there is the walking and lighted by battery Christmas tree. This is followed by the set of Lee Press-On Nails (in hard to crack, red jumbo size). Then there is Tom "Top Gun" Cruise, or is it Fonzie? Hard to say. He is followed by Sham, who, surprisingly grabs a lot of attention this year.

You hear someone's boom box blasting "I Heard it Through the Grapevine," and you're surrounded by half-a-dozen California Raisins. (Well all right, six sorority girls in Glad bags). Anyway, the raisins were everywhere this year, as were Freddy Kruger, Pebbles and Bam-Bam, and a few Hell's Angels. Yes, Tar Heels are creative (or warped?). For example, where else do you see a "transvestite pregnant nun with a mustache" or a topless mermaid being carried victoriously on the shoulders of three guys (notice their big grins?).

Oh, anyone can think up a Dracula outfit or buy a Ronald Reagan mask. But who has the imagination—or nerve—to dress up as a pair of women's breasts? (Well, there were those two girls who probably had too much witches brew).

Yes, The Flasher. Well, he whips open his trench coat to reveal his "costume" and all the M&Ms erupt in giggles. They are quickly engulfed by Frankenstein, Wonder Woman and the Tooth Fairy.

And it's only nine o'clock.

What did happen to the "Stop the Alumni Center Campaign?" The campaign against the construction of the George Watts Hill Alumni Center exploded one day last fall when students discovered a white and blue sign proclaiming the new construction site. As students living in the area scrambled to react to the sudden threat, an effort to discover what had happened was begun. We wanted to know why the center was going to be built on Stadium Drive. Weren't those woods protected from development?

After we talked with the executive director of the General Alumni Association, Chancellor Christopher Fordham, two vice chancellors, the director of the Institute of Government, the director of the Physical Plant, the chairman of the Board of Trustees and four prominent student leaders who approved the project, the following picture came into view:

The GAA has for some time needed a new building the alumni could call home; current facilities simply are inadequate. In an effort to meet that need, the GAA presented its case to the administration, which then channeled the proposal through several committees, finally arriving at a basic plan. The proposal called for the construction of a new alumni center on Kenan Hill, site of the Kenan Center and adjacent to the Smith Center. A major fund-raising campaign was promptly begun, and the architects went to work.

Shortly after the completion of the architectural plans, problems surfaced. First, it was decided that there wasn't enough room on Kenan Hill, due to a lack of parking space. Also, a behind-the-scenes political battle was being fought over who was "king of the hill." As a result, the Alumni Center was not built on Kenan Hill.

This left in limbo the plans for a multi-million dollar facility with a completed design and over $5 million in contributions toward its construction. With the GAA under great pressure to complete the building by the beginning of the University's bicentennial, it pressed the University for a workable site. The pressure worked; the University acknowledged the problem and promised the GAA a suitable location for the building. Several different locations were proposed, but none were suitable to the GAA.

The University was up against the wall. A quick decision had to be made so that the Alumni Center would be completed before the bicentennial. Fordham finally offered the Big Woods site on Stadium Drive. This site was subsequently approved by all the necessary committees, among which four prominent student leaders were included. A few questions were asked, but broad, open discussion was never initiated. Lack of time forced a decision.

Upon review, the GAA accepted the Big Woods site. The location seemed perfect — close to the heart of campus, beside Kenan Stadium, accessed by roads on two sides and plenty of parking to choose from. It seemed an ideal setting for alumni to come home to.

Student leaders representing affected students (which really includes all students, present and future) didn't agree. We felt that the alternative sites were more appropriate. It was our intention to go before the BOT with an alternative proposal. We found, however, that political influences and economic considerations were immense. Because the University promised the GAA a suitable location, the alumni were in the driver's seat.

Sipe/Eisele

Guest Writers

There was always the question of the sanctity of the land. It was thought that the Big Woods was a protected area. In the proposed long-range land-use plan, the land was designated green, or non-developable, but that was only a proposed plan. Preservation of the Big Woods would have required a move by the BOT to permanently set aside the site — a move that was never made. We were informed by the chancellor that if the Alumni Center wasn't built on that land now, some other building would be within five years. And, admittedly, the center would probably be less obtrusive than most other buildings that could be put on the site. Still, it was a very bitter pill to swallow.

As representatives of Scott College, we were concerned about the impact of construction on our area, as well as the loss of parking spaces. We met with the BOT and voiced our concerns. The members said they appreciated our interests. They invited us to come back if we had any further concerns. They told us to have a nice day. In this manner, student voices were heard.

Those of us who have been most concerned and involved feel somewhat shortchanged — shortchanged by our own administration, our BOT and our Student Government. At no point were the opinions of affected students elicited. Sadly, our administration allowed itself to be put in a position where student interests were subordinated. Student leaders made no effort to represent the student body, much less generate campuswide discussion of the plan. And frankly, there was pitifully little interest, assistance or representation from Suite C.

So the George Watts Hill Alumni Center will go up in the Big Woods. The all-too-familiar influences of big-money, power politics and paternalism over plurality have won again, at the cost of this campus and the interests of students, for whom this University is supposed to exist. We wonder whether a proposal to erect, for instance, a Student Union annex on the site would have ever seen the light of day; we somehow doubt it. In light of the recent controversies over the Rams Club's proposed use of the tennis courts behind Hinton James Residence Hall as a parking lot, housing's roughshod run over the Residence Hall Association and the quiet proposal and quick approval of the Alumni Center plans, one begins to wonder with which group priority on this campus lies.

The leaders of Scott College will continue to look after the concerns of its residents. We hope that we may allowed some input in the integration of the Alumni Center into our area. We will work energetically with the GAA toward the minimization of inconvenience to residents who frequent the Big Woods.

Having exhausted our resources and our avenues of rational protest, it is with considerable regret that we acquiesce. We are convinced that the loss of the aesthetic and emotional value of the Big Woods will be to the detriment of all students. We gave it the old college try, but this time the college wasn't on our side.

Brian Sipe, governor of Scott College, is a junior business major from Hickory. Matthew Eisele is a sophomore undecided major from Albany, Ga.

Alumni Center to help students in long run

To the editor:

As a member of the Student Alumni Association (SAA), I would like to address the issue of the new Alumni Center site. The Order of the Bell Tower, UNC's chapter of the SAA, functions as a link between the General Alumni Association and the students. We are here to stimulate interest and awareness in UNC's future as students.

The alumni are in the process of building a much-needed center to be used for activities such as homecoming, commencement, reunions, sports and other events. I want to stress that each of you is a future user of this center. It is not to be used only by million-dollar donors; it is for everyone. This will be your home base when you return to UNC.

The Stadium Drive site of the center was offered to the alumni by Chancellor Christopher Fordham and followed the normal approval process by the Faculty Committee on Buildings and Grounds, the Real Property Committee of the Board of Trustees, the Alumni Steering Committee, the Executive Committee of the alumni association and its officers and directors. This was not done without student participation: student representatives (the student body president, the senior class president, the DTH editor and the SAA President) sit on the association's board, and the student body president sits on the Board of Trustees. Notice was given to students in a front-page DTH article when the decision was made final. The site was chosen due to its excellent central location, which will provide access by foot to any campus event or facility.

Concerns have been raised by students on the issues of parking and the trees now on the site. The architect's plans are not yet in, so it is impossible to address the specifics of lot assignments at this time. It is also important to note that the parking on this campus belongs to the University, and therefore the University, not the alumni, will decide how it will be distributed.

Another asset of this site is the natural beauty of the land. Every effort is being made by the architect to nestle the building into the site; the alumni are every bit as concerned with preserving the woods and the walkways as the students. The plans for the site will enhance its beauty and will prevent anything inappropriate from being built there.

As with any issue on campus, it is to be expected that student opinion will be divided. This letter has brought forth several considerations in the hope that you, as a student and as a future alumnus, will be able to take an educated stand.

LOST ABROAD IN CHAPEL HILL

International Students at UNC

By Ted Tronnes

A small Southern town with an international flare is how some people in the Chapel Hill community like to describe their home here. Yet, the international glow is no accident. In the fall of 1987 there were over 800 foreign visitors enrolled as undergraduates, graduates, or scholars at UNC — Chapel Hill.

Fine, you say, but what if the situation were reversed?

Imagine waking up in the morning as one of more than 24,000 students at a university in a small, rural town 35 miles west of, say, Tokyo, Japan. After you got back from a wild, sake-sipping jaunt through the streets of Tokyo that first weekend in Japan, it might hit you. You would probably begin to acknowledge the fact that, culturally, things weren't going to change a great deal in the near future, and to endure, you would have to adapt. Imagine brushing up on your Japanese.

Similarly, such is the case for hundreds of foreign students who have chosen to study in Chapel Hill, of which Hosoon Chang, a 31-year-old graduate student and native of South Korea, is one. Hosoon and his wife and two-year-old daughter have lived in a student family housing facility on campus for just over a year. Although he is supported heavily by his parents in South Korea, he earns extra money from a part-time job offered to graduate students by the University. "I like it here, but when I finish I will go home," he says with a choppy, difficult English.

Like many, Hosoon is grateful to be able to study abroad; the cost alone is exorbitant to most foreigners. For example, 20 marks or 10 dollars per course is normal in Germany's higher education institutions.

Another obstacle for Hosoon is the disparity between our cultures and his. "It is hard," he says, "and the Center is understaffed. We talk to other Koreans about our problems."

To Hosoon, the "Center" is the International Center located in the Student Union, and, indeed, a staff to student ratio of 1:60 is admittedly weak. Of the 10 people who comprise the office and execute most of its services, two are full-time, two are part-time, and an average of six are active volunteers.

Through the Center, the international students here are able to work out most of the logistics of student life abroad, which involve a wide range of administrative details. Among the daily vexations with which the students must contend are the arranging of scholarship fund transactions, a constant vigilance to visa expirations and reapplication, and a functional knowledge of U.S. tax laws — all with limited fluency in English.

"The language barrier," says Tracey Hall, the program assistant at the Center, "is a constant source of frustration for international students, even when they come here supposedly for help. We do the best we can."

Culturally, one popular introduction into American life for the international student is the host family arranged by the Center. Although many students are hesitant to impose after the first few weeks, the sponsorship remains important to them. Regina Harl, a second year MBA student from Munich, remarked, "It's nice to know someone is there, across town."

With a family of his own having joined him in Chapel Hill, Hosoon has loosened his ties somewhat with the couple who gave him his first American living room. He nods an emphatic yes, however, when asked if they played a significant role in his early days here. "Really, nice, too nice," he says in a slightly misused syntax. Patting a healthy belly, he adds that, for a while, his evenings were well spent.

The foreign student also has access to a Campus Friend, another program of the Center, in which American students volunteer to be paired with newly-arrived international students in order to help them adjust to the contemporary side of student life in the U.S., and to engender international friendships. Beyond the first week of orientation, there are no obligations to either party; it is up to the students.

One of the most fulfilling experiences open to international students at Chapel Hill is the opportunity to speak to interested groups about their cultures. The Speakers Bureau, coordinated singly and voluntarily by Mrs. Edith Fischer — herself a native of Germany — provides just such an opportunity. Although a relatively small number of students volunteered this year, the numbers are growing steadily, as is the demand.

"Mostly it's the area high schools," begins Mrs. Fischer exuberantly, "who are studying foreign cultures in social studies" who request willing students to give the talks. It's a chance for the education-minded to express themselves, relate their values, and teach in what would normally be a closed environment," she says.

Even more, she added, it is an opportunity to see our schools and the education process here. High schools are popular, but recently a Pakistani woman gave a presentation on traditional costumes and festivals to the Carol Woods Retirement Community, and a group of Japanese students demonstrated Oriental food preparation techniques for another senior audience.

Another popular cultural and society amenity catering specifically to the foreign students in Chapel Hill is the International Women's English Conversation Group for the wives of foreign students and scholars.

Hosoon nods in recognition. "My wife likes it very much." The Conversation Group is headed by a volunteer, Mrs. Mary Helen Hayman — the wife of former Institute of Government professor Dr. Hayman. For 18 years the group has met in the same faculty member's home once a week for a coffee, doughnuts and a rich dialogue.

"Twenty is usually a small gathering," states Mrs. Hayman. Sometimes there are as many as 40 who regularly attend the get-together, plus children, for whom there are daycare rooms set up in the home.

"The current majority," says Mrs. Hayman, "are Japanese women as young as 16 up to grandmothers, but often 20 different nationalities are represented."

While the opportunities for personal growth on the part of the international student are apparent five minutes off the plane, many seem to integrate themselves as little as possible in the life of the community. That is the opinion of one second-year graduate student from Germany, Anje Berlin. Beautiful and friendly, she seems bothered by her own observation.

"I don't understand it," she says. "They never make friends — good friends — with anybody outside their own circle — their nationality, especially with Americans. They're the ones who still can't speak English understandably after two years. I guess they're trying, but it makes you wonder what their idea of international study is."

Anje has thoroughly enjoyed her career at UNC, and it would be nice to think that the better parts of American culture are responsible for at least some of her knowing smile. She's looking forward to going home to Berlin soon, where she'll finish her thesis and return in April to defend it. By then she'll be married.

As though thinking about her fiancée far away or a favorite sidewalk café back home, she adds in a moment of reflective insight: "Once the newness (of a place) wears off, it's hard to be away from home. You begin to judge things that are different."

For Hosoon the differences are marked even more. Americans thrive on leisure activity, he says, whereas for South Koreans, thriving still means hard work. Perhaps he has imparted some of this understanding to his newest friends here, whom he will soon be leaving.

Hosoon has said he is ready to go home and work and begin raising a family; he will go as soon as the time comes. But when he leaves Chapel Hill, this time he'll pack among his things memories of a small, Southern town with an international flare and the favorite baggy, white sweatshirt that he's wearing — the one with the blue letters UNC.

Chinese Night in Great Hall, February 24, 1988, was co-sponsored by the Friendship Association of Chinese Students and the Chinese Student Association in conjunction with the International Center.

STUDENT ACTIVISM AT UNC:

The Time Is Now!

By Graham Entwistle

Congratulations! We have the single honor of being a generation whose sole function is to consume. Let's face it, ultimately that is all we do. Fast food, faster and finer cars, USA Today and cocaine epitomize the things our generation pursues. They are our goals and our gods.

Statistics show that most of us entered college because we wanted to become super-consumers. For most of us college was not about college and learning, rather it was about making more money. College was not about seeking to stretch our limits, but it was about maximizing our potential for sweet satiation. In the end, our concerns are for ourselves.

Why do we insist on limiting ourselves to such a narrow goal as our own gratification? It's too easy to achieve, too boring. We have tremendous potential, both as individuals and as a generation. Idealists and dreamers go into fits imagining all the good we could do for our world if, only we could start putting others' need before our greed. The trouble, though, is that this is difficult to do in an ideal world, let alone this one. Our upbringing has told us to consume, our televisions and magazines scream at us to consume. Our social structure demands that we consume status symbols. We almost cannot free ourselves from consumption.

What is wrong with consuming? If it is there and one can afford it and it brings a person pleasure, then why not consume? These are difficult questions, but let's take a look at them in a broader context. First, the things we want are not always there. To be sure, they are available to us, but often at the price of not being available to another. A large corporation knows that the most profit is to be made feeding America. Thus, products can be purchased here, but often the raw materials used to make them are denied to the people who dug them out of the ground. Our national trade deficit shows that America is draining the rest of the world. We consume more than we produce. The rest of the world does without so we can stuff ourselves. No, the resources we consume are not always available. They rightfully belong to others. We've had our share.

The next point is affordability. If one has enough money to purchase a good or a service, he or she can pay for it, but may still be unable to afford it. Americans can usually pay for things, but our trade deficit and national debt show that we cannot afford it. On an even more abstract level, South African whites cannot afford to live the lives of luxury and power they have for so long. Many of them will pay for it with their lives. The same threat, though less imminent, hangs over America.

The third point raised in defense of consumption is pleasure. That people could consume more than they need, knowing that they are effectively depriving another of the resources necessary to survive is hard to understand. That they could deprive pleasure from it is sick.

Clearly, then, consuming excessively or consuming for the sake of consuming is wrong. It is an act of violence. When people are forced to do dangerous work under an oppressive system in order to provide extra luxuries for others, any profit fed back into the system perpetuates the slavery. This is where our corporations and our government have had a devastating effect on the world. There are numerous examples of our corporations exploiting the slave labor available in developing countries while any threat of the loss of profit is guarded against by covert branches of the government.

Excessive consumption meets activism at this point. If we can, through understanding and concern, break this cycle, then perhaps our world could be more just. Perhaps then the degree of misery could be reduced. Then we could take pleasure not from consumption gratification, but from sowing the seeds of justice and being instruments of peace.

There are two avenues we must pursue in order to achieve this: personal and systemic justice. Personal justice is easy to grasp. The necessary changes are simple to understand, but habits must change. Small sacrifices must be made. A non-exhaustive list might include boycotting Coca-Cola until they remove themselves and their products from South Africa, boycotting Coors beer because Joseph Coors uses the profits to fund the contras, having nothing to do with the CIA until they cease their violence and drug trafficking. Such things bring pressure to change, but cannot be considered a whole solution.

Achieving systemic justice is much more difficult. There is no agreed upon path and the way is strewn with obstacles. But we can no longer afford not to seek justice in our world. If you want to dance you have to pay the piper. Thus far, the piper has been held down and gagged, so we haven't had to pay. But if you listen, late at night in a small village somewhere in the third world, you will hear the rising anger of the men, the cold resolve of the women, and the cries of the children. God hears everyone of those cries and his heart breaks. It's time we listened and acted. We can no longer afford not to.

Graham Entwistle is a senior interdisciplinary studies major from Charlotte, NC.

The Residence Hall Association was formed in 1973 and took the place of its predecessor the Residence College Federation. RHA is dorm government for resident students, working to help people like where they live. It does this by representing residents on issues of concern and seeking ways to improve the quality of dorm life. RHA also works to enhance resident life through social activities, academic and cultural programs, physical improvements in the dorms, and support of certain all-campus activities (such as Springfest).

Each fall, RHA and the area governments together sponsor leadership retreats to help prepare elected officers for their term. RHA develops rules and guidelines to govern the use of dorm social funds, dorm enhancement funds, the use of alcohol at dorm-sponsored events, dorm elections, and summer social funds. But most importantly we are representatives of the on-campus and Granville residents and we take our responsibility to speak and work for them seriously.

The government structure begins at the dorm level with floor senators or dorm presidents. On North Campus and Mid Campus, the buildings elect a president and each area elects a governor. On South Campus, the floors elect presidents and a governor is elected by the entire dorm. Dorm and floor presidents sit on the area councils and governors are members of the RHA Governing Board. The RHA president appoints a staff which includes executive secretary, treasurer, and executive assistants.

We believe in making the dorms better places to live. We want people to enjoy their environment. That's our part in making resident life better.

D. Kelly Clark, RHA president

The purpose of STV is to provide students with direct access to television production on a regular, extra-curricular basis. STV weekly produces their own cable show entitled "General College" and annually produces the "Video Yearbook". All members are voluntary and the management staff is appointed by its governing Board of Directors. This year has been special for STV. Their programming increased by 600% and they also passed a student referendum.

The Senior Class of 1988 sponsored many events this past school year. Their activities included initiating the Senior "Big Buddy" Program, sponsoring "Senior-Nites Out", participating in "Carolina Today", helping with "Tarheel Tabletalks", sponsoring an all-campus band party for UNICEF, planning Senior Information Days, and the December and May graduations. The major accomplishment of the Senior Class of 1988 was the Lighting of the Old Well. The Seniors raised $250,000 for the Senior Class Gift, which was a national record.

CLEF HANGERS

The UNC-CH Clef Hangers have been harmonizing together for eleven years. Whether singing for dorms, sororites, freshman convocations, Chancellor's luncheons, halftimes at UNC basketball games, or in their concerts at Memorial Hall each semester, the Clefs have built a reputation for providing the finest in a capella entertainment. The Clef Hangers are also actively involved in the community and often sing in churches and schools. Fall and Spring breaks give the group the opportunity to promote the University outside the Chapel Hill area. During the past year, the Clefs have entertained in seven states at such notable locations as Breakers Resort, Walt Disney World, Epcot Center, Mary Baldwin College, Cloister Resort, and the University of Pennsylvania. Above all, the goal of the Clefs is to have fun sharing their music. Member selection is done in the spring semester by audition.

The UNC Entrepreneur Club, founded only two short years ago, on March 26, 1988 held their annual Spring Entrepreneurial Conference. The Club is led by their President, Co President and their faculty advisor, Dr. Rollie Tillman of the Institute of Private Enterprise and the UNC School of Business. The Entrepreneur Club likes to think of themselves as an "idea" group. Their objective is "to procure guests to discuss business ideas and learn their mistakes so that we may not make the same in our ventures."

ORDER OF THE OLD WELL

The Order of the Old Well is dedicated to the recognition of academic and extra-curricular excellence. Created in 1949, the Order honors students for their unselfish contributions to the University community. Each year the Order also undertakes research for Chancellor's Award nominees and sponsors a reception for the recipients of faculty teaching awards.

The Order of the Golden Fleece is the University's oldest and highest honorary. It exists to recognize and honor outstanding achievement in service of the University community on the part of the students, faculty, staff, alumni, and others. The selection is carried out by the current student membership on the basis of three criteria: loyalty to the University; high character; and leadership which has significantly enhanced the University experience.

PHI BETA KAPPA

MOREHEAD SCHOLARS

CLASS OF 1988

The John Motley Morehead Foundation administers undergraduate scholarship awards designed to attract outstanding, well-rounded students to study at UNC-CH. According to the Morehead Foundation Indenture, the presence of these students is intended to improve the quality of the University through the scholars' contributions to campus activities and in the classroom. Morehead Awards are based solely on merit. Financial need is not considered. Criteria include: evidence of moral force of character, capacities to lead and motivate fellow students, scholastic ability, extracurricular achievement, and physical vigor as shown by participation in sports and in other ways.

GREEK WEEK

UNC Greeks Step Out For A Cause

By Kathy Peters

In the springtime, a young man's fancy may turn to love. Young Greeks' fancies, true to the tradition of their playful predecessors the deities, turn toward games.

So just when several fraternity houses on campus were being renovated, so too was an idea almost as age-old as Plato himself.

It's an idea that on some campuses has evolved into a cause for bashing Greeks.

At UNC-CH, it was a week-long, bizarre combination of rock'n'roll, helium balloons and charity donations, a festival that hadn't been held on the Hill since 1984, according to its co-chairwoman, Leah Totten.

Mere mortals called this revived event Greek Week.

In fact, everyone calls it Greek Week.

The title perhaps sounded like a simple excuse for Adonises and Venuses to frolic in bacchanalian feasts of the Budweiser type, but, according to Totten, the event served three purposes. Co-sponsored by the Interfraternity and Panhellenic Councils, it improved relations among the social organizations, fostered better Greek to non-Greek relations and raised money for charity.

Thirty-two social fraternities and sororities (all except Delta Kappa Epsilon) mixed for a week full of fun and fundraising. The week opened March 21 with a bloodmobile contest co-sponsored by the Greek Week Committee and Alpha Phi Omega. Students gave 250 pints, setting a campus record for blood donation. Also, a helium balloon liftoff in the Pit raised money for the Multiple Sclerosis Society. Delta Phi Epsilon co-sponsored the event.

Then there was entertainment. Greek Night Out at local bars and restaurants featured some specials the night of March 22nd, while the Pit featured some daytime special events. For example, the a cappella singing groups the Lareleis and the Four Corners made music during the lunch-rush March 23rd. The next day, Kappa Alpha Psi and Delta Delta Delta strutted their stuff there, showing racial unity by holding a joint step show. Both organizations had been training together for months, according to chairwoman Totten.

Also, the Carolina Union co-sponsored a human charades and comedy act, which was open to all students.

The Destination Unknown Mixer March 24th was perhaps the highlight of Greek Week. Buses rolled fraternity and sorority members to a surprise destination — Wheels Roller Rink in Durham — where they skated to the tunes of the Connells and the Atlanta based trio drivin' 'n' cryin'.

Lesser known bands got a chance in the spotlight, too, as Greek Week's Battle of the Bands began. The event started at 6 p.m. March 25 and lasted until midnight, with seven bands competing for 45 minutes each. Students packed into Little and Big Fraternity Courts as the groups alternately blasted out tunes from the Kappa Alpha and Pi Kappa Alpha porches. From the ranks of bands named Smashed Gladiss, The Fidgets, Ex Libris, Play by Play, the Attitudes and the Filter Kings, Lo Sholder emerged to win the contest prize — free studio time. But they've never taken it; the Greek Week Committee couldn't track them down after the judging.

Funding for the total benefit came from T-shirt and cup sales and individual donations. Also, the Greek Week Committee asked any organization participating in the Destination Unknown Mixer to pay $500 for bus fare and band rental.

Throughout the week, Greek social organizations divided into six teams, received points for participation in blood donation and human charades and were to receive points for the Greek Games, a field day. Who won? No one, according to Brent Milgrom, Greek Week co-chairman and president of the Inter-fraternity Council. Since the scheduled games were rained out March 26th, there weren't enough points to make a solid decision, he said.

Yet one organization was clearly a winner: the Lineberger Cancer Research Center, whose researchers received a $10,000 donation from the executive officers of the Panhellenic Council and the Inter-fraternity Council at a final ceremony and banquet March 28th. The Greek Week Committee is the largest single donor to the Cancer Research Center, according to Totten. Its donation went toward the Center's breast cancer research division.

"Any time you can raise $10,000 in one week, it's a tremendous success," Totten said.

She and Milgrom agree that Greek Week improved Greeks' image among themselves and in the University community at large. "As far as the community was concerned, the response was very positive. People saw that fraternities and sororities were good for something other than just socializing."

In fact, Totten enjoyed Greek Week so much that she's running the event next year.

Kathy Peters is a junior journalism major and member of Kappa Alpha Theta sorority.

CRUM RESIGNS

But Was He Really That Bad?

By James Surowiecki

Throughout his final years at the University of North Carolina, head football coach Dick Crum increasingly came under fire from students and alumni for his inability to keep UNC among the nation's elite college football teams. Last December, after the Tar Heels finished a disappointing 5-6 season by losing their final three games, Crum resigned and the Educational Foundation bought out his contract to the tune of $800,000. A speedy quest ensued for Crum's successor, and Mack Brown, formerly of Tulane, was named UNC's new head coach.

The turmoil of Crum's final season and the negative publicity he received because of it, though, served to obscure the true magnitude of his accomplishments during his ten year stay in Chapel Hill. Much of the disappointment UNC's ineffectiveness engendered in its fans was the result of Crum's early successes. Had Crum's teams not been as excellent as they were in the early 1980's, few would have expected much from the teams of the latter half of the decade. As it was, in his first six seasons at UNC, Crum took the Tar Heels to five bowl games and made them into perennial top 20 contenders. When, in the last four years, UNC went to one bowl game and finished above .500 but once, Crum became an easy target for the critics. But it wasn't always so. Crum came to Chapel Hill for the 1978 season, replacing Bill Dooley, who at the time held the record for the most Tar Heel coaching victories. Crum would eventually break that record, but got off to an inauspicious start, as his first UNC team went 5-6, dropping close games to Maryland, Clemson, and powerhouse Pittsburgh. Still, Amos Lawrence, the speedy tailback who had rushed for 1,211 yards the previous year as a freshman, again broke the 1,000 yard barrier. Lawrence would go on to break that barrier in his final two years, and become the only UNC player ever to rush for 1,000 yards in each of his four years.

Things improved dramatically for Crum and the Tar Heels in the next three years. In 1979, All ACC linebacker Buddy Curry served as the cornerstone of a defense that would become one of the nation's most feared, and the Tar Heels rallied to an 8-3-1 record, capping off the year with a stirring 17-15 win over Michigan in the Gator Bowl. Lawrence rushed for 118 yards and quarterback Matt Kupec led the Tar Heels on a 97 yard touchdown drive in the third quarter that gave them the lead for good.

One of the key figures in the 1979 season was linebacker Lawrence Taylor, who came into his own in the latter half of the year and quickly established himself as an absolute force on the field. Taylor would eventually become an outside linebacker for the New York Giants and earn himself an MVP award as well as a reputation as one of the greatest to ever play the game.

Such accolades were still in the future, though, during the 1980 season, when Taylor became nationally recognized and sparked the Tar Heels to a phenomenal 11-1 record. Crum's defensive schemes, obviously more effective because of Taylor's presence, shut down opposing offenses and 11 of UNC's 12 opponents scored fewer than 21 points. The lone exception to this rule, though, was Oklahoma, which blew out the Tar Heels 41-7 in Norman.

UNC finished its year with a convincing 16-7 defeat of Texas in the Bluebonnet Bowl. Lawrence, in the final game of his college career, rushed for 104 yards, and the Tar Heels defense held Texas to just two second-half first downs. UNC was ninth in the final poll. Taylor, who ended the year with an incredible 16 sacks, earned first-team All America honors and was the overwhelming choice as ACC Player of the Year.

The following year was just as sweet. Junior tailback Kelvin Bryant took over where Lawrence had left off and rushed for 1015 yards while scoring 17 touchdowns. UNC lost twice at home, to South Carolina and Clemson, but knocked off Arkansas 31-27 in the Gator Bowl to finish 10-2. The bowl game victory, unsurprisingly, was a tale of tailbacks, as Bryant slashed through the Razorback defense for 148 yards and his backup, Ethan Horton, rushed for 144. The Tar Heels were eighth in the final poll.

Those two years were Crum's heyday at Chapel Hill. His teams were winning and were nationally prominent, he was fashioning an impressive record in bowl games, and he had earned a reputation as an excellent defensive mastermind. The following two years, UNC had successive 8-4 seasons, and in 1982 ended the year with an impressive 26-10 rout with seventh-ranked Texas in the Sun Bowl, as Horton rushed for 119 yards in relief of Bryant.

The combination of a powerful ground game and a fearsome defense seemed to make up for the absence of a passing game, but hints of the trouble that lay ahead for Crum appeared in 1983. UNC won its first seven games of the year and traveled to Maryland as the number 3 team in America. But a couple of questionable calls and an incredible Terp comeback gave Maryland the 28-26 victory, and knocked UNC into a downward spiral. The Tar Heels lost four of their last five games, and ended their season in miserable fashion by getting blown out by Florida State in the Peach Bowl, 28-3. Later, Crum said he never should have accepted the bowl bid.

Whether that final loss carried over into the next season remains a mystery, but Crum's magic seemed to have disappeared for good. In 1984, the Tar Heels went 5-5-1 and lost four of their first five games, including a 52-20 blowout by Doug Flutie and Boston College. Horton did rush for 1,274 yards in his senior season, but the following year William Humes rushed for just 515 yards, breaking a string of 12 consecutive years in which UNC had a 1,000 yard rusher.

UNC went 5-6 in 1985, and rebounded slightly in 1986 with a 7-4-1 record, as Derrick Fenner emerged as one of the nation's finer tailbacks and Mark Maye showed signs of living up to the promise of his high school career. But Crum's final season ended in disaster, as the Tar Heels took a 5-3 record into the Clemson game, dropped a close one to the Tigers, choked in the clutch against Virginia and finally were manhandled by Duke. It was an inglorious finish to Crum's career at UNC, and it was a season marred throughout by speculation about his status as a coach.

In many respects Dick Crum was not built to be a head coach. He disliked dealing with the press, was reserved and showed little patience with the whims of fans. What Crum wanted to do was work with his players and fashion them into a winning squad. His success at doing so early in his tenure only made his failure to do so later that much more difficult to understand. Crum was not a crowd pleaser, and his quiet demeanor only served to make him more susceptible to criticism. When he lost, he did nothing to detract attention away from the loss. Charming in private, he was often brusque in public, and Tar Heel fans seemed to relish attacking him.

But during his ten years at UNC, Crum won. His final record as Tar Heel coach was 72-41-3, and for all his problems defeating ranked opponents, that remains a fine record. Crum said at one point that the problem with football at UNC was that the school wanted to be Harvard five days a week and Oklahoma on Saturday. Well for a couple of years, Crum made the Tar Heels, if not Oklahoma, then something pretty close. In the wake of his departure, it is his efforts then and not his troubles later, that should be remembered.

James Surowiecki is a senior journalism major from Connecticut.

The Man Behind the Mike

by Amy Edwards

Robert "Sarge" Keefer leads a life of which many sports enthusiasts can only dream.

His involvement in sports began in his hometown of Cleveland, Ohio, over 50 years ago, where he became a sports celebrity among area fans while announcing professional baseball games for the Cleveland Indians.

In 1976, fed up with Cleveland's weather and the dwindling success of the area teams, Sarge and his wife, Ann, began looking in areas in which to retire. Wanting to retire in a college town, the Keefers visited the University of North Carolina at Charlotte, Wake Forest, Duke and North Carolina State Universities, but chose the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

As a man with a passion for basketball, Sarge had watched many Carolina games on television, making Chapel Hill an easy choice. "As soon as I saw the town, I knew it was for me," he said.

Opting for early retirement at age 62, Sarge and his wife moved to North Carolina in 1978. But missing the sporting life, he contacted the athletic department about possible employment. "I wanted to do anything," he said.

There were no openings at that time, but a year later, Sarge was contacted about working as a checker at the athletic training table. He gladly accepted.

Sarge was given his nickname by the athletes at the training table. The head of the dining service, a retired Navy officer, was nicknamed "Captain." The logical choice for Keefer, who was once an Army sergeant, was "Sarge." The name fits him perfectly.

Sarge continued working at the table for six years. In 1985, he was transferred to the Dean E. Smith Student Activities Center where he was a courier. His main duty was taking money from ticket and program sales to the bank.

"It was a perfect job for me," says Sarge, "I was able to meet different people on campus and in town."

Before Sarge started working at the Smith Center, he had begun announcing some of the Tar Heel home baseball games.

Sarge is never at a loss for words on the microphone; he confidently leads the fans at Boshamer Stadium in the seventh-inning stretch institution, "Take Me Out to the Ball Game."

When the game is slow-moving, Sarge tests out new jokes on the crowd, and many boo at the corny punchlines. But the crowd loves him.

Though much of the ball game conversation is between Sarge and the fans, the players are not free from Sarge and his microphone. Until this year, the press box was about 10 feet directly behind the catcher. When a Tar Heel player stepped into the batter's box, Sarge would announce his name with an unpredictable nickname. Devy "Taco" Bell and Dave "Horrendous" Arendas were two of the player's more memorable name from seasons past.

Sarge laughs when he speaks of his antics. "I know it's rude to make fun, but I don't mean any harm," he says grinning.

At Carolina, his P.A. work is not limited to baseball games. Sarge also announced soccer, lacrosse, gymnastics and volleyball matches at various times. When needed, he fills in at basketball games. As a popular announcer, Sarge has a full schedule of events to cover.

One morning in April 1986, he stood up to stretch while working a softball tournament. He couldn't walk and was rushed to the hospital; he had had a stroke. He remained in the hospital for seven weeks and had to give up his job at the Smith Center.

At first, Sarge was partially paralyzed from the waist down. The first few months he was out of the hospital he used a wheelchair to get around; he now uses a cane.

He walks with a limp and needs help climbing the stairs to the newly constructed press box. "The press box is nice," he says, "But I'd rather be back in my old spot behind the catcher — it was more personal."

As he sits at the press table in his Carolina-blue attire, Sarge turns up the volume on the stereo. "The rock music helps the players relax," he says. "Also, they'd kill me if I turned it off."

NOTHING CAN COMPARE

Off-Campus Living

By Celeste Whittaker

There's a trend that's taking college campuses across the United States by storm. That trend is off-campus living. Lots of students are trying it and many are loving it.

Within a 10 mile radius of the UNC campus, one can find at least 20 apartment complexes. These complexes range from plush to downright cheap, and many will cater to the specific needs and schedules of students. There are also many homes with empty rooms, whose owners are anxiously waiting for the right student to answer their ad.

Some students are forced to seek off-campus housing since dorm space is limited. Unfortunately, on-campus housing can only accommodate approximately 30% of UNC students. Once that dreaded news that they didn't get back into the dorm for the following semester is heard, students are out searching for the best deal they can find in off-campus living.

Many students prefer living off-campus because they have found they can save a lot of money. Claude Nixon, a Carolina student, said, "I found a room for $80.00 a month. I know that if I stayed in the dorm it would have cost at least $600.00 a semester." Others prefer living off-campus because it offers more privacy. The dorms can often be a source of constant loud music and partying. Kathy Wilson, also a Carolina student, said "It gives you the privacy that you can't get in the dorm."

The dorm rooms are also very small and become crowded when only a few visitors come by. When your roommate has company you often have to find somewhere else to go. "Apartment life," Kathy said "has given me the chance to cook my own meals and to have my own room. I have cable television and there's a lot more space."

However, everyone doesn't see off-campus living as being advantageous. James Thompson, a fullback for the Tarheel's football team, doesn't "want to worry about paying bills every month." That is surely one guarantee about apartment life—more bills! Plan on at least an electric bill, rent, phone bill, and possibly a cable bill. If you are conservative, the bills won't put you in the poorhouse.

There are more advantages to dorm life. On-campus students are more aware of campus happenings. Also, they are much closer to campus events, such as football and basketball games. And parking is not a major problem because they are able to walk to these events. Not to mention the buses many off-campus students must endure because they cannot get campus parking stickers. When you live off campus, you can also easily lose some of that Carolina spirit. There's no more ninth floor mixers or crazy dorm games.

Sure there are things that you'll miss about the dorm, but for cable t.v. and your own room, many would choose the apartment route all over again.

Certain times of the year are most popular for apartment seekers — the spring and summer months. That is when most landlords offer their "specials." Sarah Black, manager of Kensington Trace Apartments, said,

"In the summer we get a lot of interested students. I think the summer school special that we do for the students is a big plus."

In the heat of the summer, students also appreciate having a swimming pool at their disposal. It's nice to come home after class on a hot day and jump into the pool.

To totally deprive yourself of dorm life would certainly be a mistake. Once you've experienced it, move on to bigger and better things and that's what off-campus life is. Even after all the long waits for the bus and the parking inconveniences, nothing can compare.

President of the University of North Carolina

Charlson

"During your entire life you will remember your days at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill as being days filled with opportunities — opportunities to make friends, opportunities to study, opportunities to enjoy the beauty of your surroundings. Let me remind you that the real purpose of this university has been to enable you in the future, no matter where you are, to make friends, to study, and to enjoy the beauty of your surroundings. By doing so, you will live a productive life and achieve what your university so much wished for you."

FARRIS W. WOMACK
Vice Chancellor for Business and Finance

CHRISTOPHER C. FORDHAM

Chancellor of the University of North Carolina

Last Day in Office — June 30, 1988

In addition to an outstanding faculty and other academic resources, the University is fortunate to have talented, energetic, socially sensitive and thoroughly impressive students. Its traditions of student freedom and responsibility, as exemplified by the Honor System, continue, and offer students the opportunity for strong personal growth and development out of the classroom as well as strong intellectual and scholarly development in the classroom. And students respond by providing strong leadership, which results in an outstanding student newspaper, outstanding Student Union programs and many individual student honors and awards. I have a special sense of affiliation with the Class of 1988, since they kindly and generously commissioned me and my wife Barbara as honorary members of the Class.

The momentum toward excellence which the University has now achieved should be mentioned. Despite compelling resource, regulatory and governance problems, adverse circumstances which would stultify lesser institutions, the University of North Carolina has continued to advance its capabilities to serve the people of North Carolina and the nation with distinction and effectiveness. She is a grand and glorious institution. Long live the Class of 1988, may you be her supporters and may you be counted in her base of strength for future achievements. Best Wishes!

SAMUEL R. WILLIAMSON, JR.
Provost

Charlson

"Undergraduate education at Carolina must remain a central mission: its quality and verve give life and meaning to this great research university."

FREDERICK W. SCHROEDER, JR. Dean of Students

"One of the true joys of being a part of this University is observing its eternal freshness of spirit, renewed in each of us every year by incoming classes. As for generations before, through countless lectures and labs, friendships, ideas, conversations, passions and associations, we are transformed, supported, unsettled, nurtured, abraded and polished until — almost as quickly as it began — we are away to other lives in other places. But always there remains "Carolina".

Charlton

DONALD A. BOULTON
Vice Chancellor and Dean of Student Affairs

Tisdale

"The motto of the Division of Student Affairs, 'I care about student success,' really says it all. We have a great student body and this is a great place to work in."

HAROLD G. WALLACE
Vice Chancellor of University Affairs

Tisdale

"While working, teaching or studying at the University, one becomes aware of the great traditions that have been transmitted to us. Of course we want to be true to those traditions, but we must also take advantage of opportunities to make significant and needed changes, especially in the diversity of our student body, faculty and staff."

GARY A. EVANS
Vice Chancellor of Development and University Relations

Tisdale

"After the New York Knicks won the NBA championship, Bill Bradley said, 'Becoming number one is easier than staying number one.' That also applies to universities. UNC is one of the top universities. It takes commitment, dedication, support, and hard work by everyone to stay there. Slipping comes quickly to those who relax."

GILLIAN CELL
Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences

Tisdale

"I believe that a student can find here whatever he or she wants: a fine education, opportunities for intellectual and personal growth, superb facilities, friendships, and one of the most beautiful campuses in the country."

RONALD C. LINK
Dean of the School of Law

Charlson

"War is hell, but administration is harder."

JOHN B. TURNER
Dean of the School of Social Work

Tisdale

TOM S. MIYA
Dean of the School of Pharmacy

Tisdale

"After eleven and a half years in Chapel Hill, I am continually amazed at the richness of the environment in which the School operates. The cooperative and collaborative spirit at this University and that of the organizations in the Research Triangle Park characterize this place as an exciting place - where things can be made to happen."

EVELYN DANIEL
Dean of the School of Library Science

isdale

"The reason academic politics are so bitter is because the stakes are so small."

STUART BONDURANT
Dean of the School of Medicine

"The painter's vision is not a lens. —Robert Lowell"

DR. LAUREL ARCHER COPP
Dean of the School of Nursing

"After fourteen years my favorite song parody is
'CAROLINA DEAN, KEEP SMILING!'"

Tisdale

FRANK BROWN
Dean of the School of Education

MICHEL A. IBRAHIM
Dean of the School of Public Health

Tisaale

"I want our students to know how lucky we all are to be at Carolina. When I visit other institutions, prospective students and faculty seek me out to learn about our university and town. I always return home with a sense of pride and satisfaction."
